Manager's Commentary

The month of June ended up being mere prologue to an early July surge to 8+ year highs. Brexit caused some mild concern the morning after the vote as markets adjusted for pollsters having once again gotten it completely wrong, but Vietnam was perhaps the first market to realise that whenever the mess is unravelled the rest of Europe is unlikely to return to the presumed savagery that the (formerly) United Kingdom saved them from by its mere presence, and both sides will still need to eat and wear clothes. Which, in combination with the supply of Samsung mobile phones, is where Vietnam comes in.

Our main concern with the VNI having finally broken through strong resistance is the domestic/foreign turnover split, which rose above 94% to 6% on a couple of days last week, suggesting a highly geared move to the upside. Diversification of the investor base is becoming extremely urgent; one hopes the regulator is cognisant of that.
